

Generating, Regenerating or Degenerating? DeReGenerating!

So it seems that all work given from above puts the humanity below to a state of deep misery. We shall make an important distinction between what is this above. With the above we might be able to identify a class of governors who more or less are driven by an ambition of power. Such an ambition is spread on the populace, the humanity below, who in turn seems to have no other choice but to comply. There might be however the case in which, among the common folk who has "morally" accepted their "social destiny", a prophet might arise. Such prophet might have a mystic period in which he understands that a certain work, the work to elevate oneself to another above then, an ambition that comes from within and has nothing to do with power but is merely a spiritual one, such a work is actually joyful.

What gives the prophet the connotation of a "disgrace carrier" comes really from his will to communicate such joyfulness. The rest of the populace is in fact now too rooted in the mind set of the power evil organism. The more our prophet prophecies, the more his once pure message of love might turn into a message of hater. Has anyone lost the ears to understand? The issue might be of a different matter. The comforts provided by the power organism has altered completely the natural state to the point that it is impossible for a human to give them up. The governing class themselves only second a beast that has become indomitable and keeps evolving now by itself, technology. As many has claimed to think of technology as the extension of humans we shall now think of humans as the extension of technology.

While technology has in fact taken over, provided now of its own intelligence, the algorithmic processing, we can see the function of the prophet in a technology governed reality, as the one who tries to invert the function, turning contemporary technology in again a human extension. The issue here is very crucial for the destiny of humanity itself. As technology becomes an independent creature, humans only function seems to be that of giving each other credits to get a ride on it and for different purposes, always renegotiating how these technically accelerated rides should occur and eventually deregulating all norms and devaluing those credits, particularly when such a technological beast not only takes over the physical faculties but also the mental faculty of a humanity turned obsolete.

The above is a typical scenario hindering the new generation to generate itself and the old generation to allow any regeneration. A certain degeneration seems in fact at the base of an age in which a technology humans have for centuries utilized as an extension, has turned in its own creature. In such a scenario, as the whole of humanity might at last let go to such governance, a prophet might be able to prophesied a way to reappropriate oneself of one's humanity and this by attempting to govern the governor, to dominate the beast as one of these beasts the primitive man had to learn to deal with and eventually subdue and milk. In order to accomplish this, the human capacity ought to be enlarged and traditional conformist mentalities ought to cease to leave space to a new human able to regenerate itself in the age of physically and mentally dictating technology.

Here again certain spontaneous sacrifices might be needed to actuate such a process of gaining control over a new landscape, an effort that cannot start collectively but rather should be activated individually in each human. The individual human capacity ought to expand enough to be around and not within the technical apparatus currently substituting him. It is a very actuable process only hindered by a certain social conformism and moral or from a "revolutionary" force that still seek a human actor to accuse. It is at this very stage that inspired humans, prophets, shall act like kamikaze to awake with fresh wind all such a conformism turning humanity into a petrified and technically alimented plant. The significance of a hero is here very high, however not the usual kamikaze hero exploding himself in the sleepy crowd but a hero throwing on such a crowd a conceptual bomb, such as a lifelong martyrdom.

In this respect we shall consider however the more silent and individualistic revolution that is slowly taking place, not then the sudden crowd reacting upon the regime, which has maybe more rooted humanity to accept their technical destiny, but rather a pure evolution of the soul to be able to comply with the technical apparatus. As fire was utilized to scare and protect the first humanity from the animal beasts, the fire of the soul is in fact what a humanity lost in the technical landscape is left with. Only with such a fire single humans will be able to scare the beast and lead himself out of the overwhelming chaos to possibly develop a new technology based on such a fire, a spiritual technology.
