

Against the New Religious Flow of Numbness

Making meaning of our human existence is the most noble duty of the single human being. It is by far an official or recognized duty. Throughout such an attempt any person will be categorized in different manner (lunatic, artist ...) and the most inclusive and civilized of societies will even find a place for him. However such a noble duty is incompatible with any of these societal role.

In order to make meaning, and this is only partially my theory, one in fact ought to be somewhat of an outcast of any corporation, whether philosophical or religious or academic or commercial or political or societal. Why is it so? Why do I strongly believe that making meaning on our human existence is not only impossible but corruptive within such given corporations?

A member of a corporation ought to act accordingly, ought to blindly accept a set of values, and enforce them or at the most modify them along with all other members. I believe these corporations to be all but faiths that numb a true sinking into the depths of human nature. By far in fact these faiths are but blinding lights spotted onto such a depth from the very surface, only creating somewhat of a confusion and disorientation in any human willing to follow a certain existential vocation.

Now more then ever these corporations are established and almost unavoidable. We allowed them to perpetrate, as the trend of Christianity did in a corrupted and weakened Roman empire. We allowed to circulate with all their philanthropic values and when we less expected a new form of inquisition will kick in to burn particularly those free souls who understand the importance of being without them.

To the state of numbness now affecting most of the cultivated humanity a state of rage is naturally following. Rage is in fact but a stage in which one is unable to doubt for a second certain accusations turning his persona indignant. Now I am not talking about the single but the mass and how numbly is, from a state of freedom, setting up new dogmas based on new Christian-like values.

So no matter how tolerant and and only apparently open minded all these new priests and prophets (politicians, academics and any social media influencer) they seem, they are but puppet of a new wave which has its beginning with fraternity and love and will only end in the most cruel injustices. To begin with there will be an attempt to monoculturalize all these values as they set in. This will automatically create heresies which will need to be persecuted and exterminated. Then there will be the new monasteries and the propagation of the new law which will create the new order, increasingly less spiritual and more and more becoming a new form of power for the most powerful and their mischief.

I am but terrified meeting people and hearing out their beliefs. I guess I keep most kind to them and yet the right attitude would be to scold them. I am not talking about these poor and ignorant first and second generation immigrant worshipping for instance the Islamic faith. I am talking about hippies and hipsters with all their values. I am not talking about the actual content of their values but the way they blindly adhere to them.

It seems there is no more a freedom of choice, a freedom or the possibility of being neutral and simply apply common sense to deciding the small factors determining our daily life. It seems we ought to follow the patterns of either one or the other upcoming faiths. Interestingly enough these choices are not so much radical in affecting or modifying our very soul. They are very much related to what we consume. They seem to be rather related to censoring out content from the real world. They seem to want to place an individual, especially from an early age inside a bubble, a fully sealed bubble in which his numbed existence will take place.

Let's burst these bubbles, at least let's burst out of the bubble around us, keeping us in a most arrogant ignorance. We ought to act like Hellenistic philosophers. We ought to build strength from within and really no food nor TV content nor any form of consumption will affect us as always within us will be a firm star blinking through whatever tempest. Let's thus stop creating all these new regulations concerning consumption and focus on our very selves, a path we can only undertake individually a path the master can only address us but alone and only in a most dreadful solitude will be the way to the oracle for our ultimate revelation.

For the time being we are but set in a firm principle, an intuitive directive going against all trends, all religions to come, all ideologies, riding at times only partially with them only to soon find ourselves going almost naked, with few belongings mostly necessary for our philosophy rather than for us. In such a state we cannot but be avoided and ridiculed especially by those who so seriously believe in their career trajectory within whatever corporation. And yet the destiny of all these corporation it is but collapse like Babel towers, systems doomed to die off the inevitable disorder which will set in their strict order.