

On the Restreaming of Life

Who is the model for a new humanity? Are we to listen to the philanthropically indoctrinated citizens who have no practical experience of life or our with to listen to life itself, or better to its source? It is clear; we ought to find the source of a pure life to ourselves become pure. We ought to climb the river of life to its source, reach the source and bath in the source before being able to return to the mud of civilized life to communicate our example.

There is no naivity in all this but it is clear that the naivity is in the man in his chair with all his well formulated notions which will take him and his fellow others to govern humanity, to guide it even more further down a precipice. The fall is inevitable and yet the salvation lays in devising once own autonomy from the great modern enterprise.

At the source of civilization are the valleys surrounding most pure stream from humanity keeps streaming. It has always being a process of corruption and repurification. However now, when life is captured at the foot and it is not let up again, the real heroes become not so much those that protest such an interruption adding poison to the poison. The heroes are the very few that annoticeably brings life back up to its source in order to regenerate its potential.