

The Unofficial Persecution

Reflecting aloud on the global ideology now in fashion, we cannot recognize certain patterns. These patterns are based on democratic principles. Choices are therefore made in accordance with the respect of any human right. Under this way of thinking, the officially persecuted individuals become the subject of social benefits and power is progressively delegated to them.

As this officially persecuted minorities become the new regime of decision makers, the ethical ground of society black-out. The black-out is generated by turning this minority into a majority refusing the collaboration of the other, excluding any other way of thinking and acting also at the political level. This monopoly turns inevitably persecution around.

The former persecutors have by now become the official persecuted. The former persecuted have become the official persecutors. Under this swap of polarity however we can find it necessary to highlight a third dimension. We have been purposely talking thus far about official persecuted and persecutors. Within this polarity there both ambivalently retain their potential of persecuting the other.

Unofficially however, in the battle between the official persecutors and the official persecuted swapping their roles throughout history, it is possible to identify what we can call the real persecuted, the ones who live at the margins of this constant battle and who continuously suffer from it. These unofficially persecuted humans live up to the staged fighting of rumourous individuals.

We ought to recognize then is not so much the natural inclination of a person to migrate or to love someone of the same sex and so forth, but rather their adherence to one of the other beast staging the political fight. The authentic persecuted, in his stoic silent, retains in fact the potential to bring forward a real alternative to the political battle logorating the human race. This authentic persecuted is the one who comes out to solve the devastating conflict of the official persecutors and the official persecuted resulting into total war.
