

A New Spiritual Beginning

How are we to expect that a large union build on "good" values will not one day be used for evil purposes? History is crowded with constant shifts between the good and the villain which the public opinion and the media echoing it only tend to further radicalize.

Perhaps the hardest of tasks for humans is to keep moderate. For it, it is necessary to be close to nature and take care of it. In this respect, larger systems, no matter their initial philanthropic mission, will to any degree act as a detachment of its members to its nature. The larger the system also the bigger will be the possible level of repression and the larger the calamities and bloodshed required to bring humanity back to normal.

Much energy and resources are thus wasted for a matter that could be settled right from the start and ethically. All that ought to be refrained in fact are worldly desires. The maturation of a worldly desire in fact cannot but give rise to further chaos. If worldly desires can be refrained and substituted with spiritual ones humans would have the great possibility to reach a divine state.

Alas spirituality is and is likely to be always the refugee of a society which only obeys to sterile principles while developing the cancer of war and destruction. To the spiritual nothing is left but prepare for a new beginning in which humans, humbled by their stubborn greed will have the ears and earths to listen, at least for some time.
