

The Eternal Center

Few will agree with me and yet extremism leads new forms of extremism until human passions are finally beat down by catastrophic events such as wars. Any form of extremism ought to then be recognized and cut at the root.

Now what we generally recognize as extremism can be only then a respond to another form of extremism. It does therefore not help to point fingers at the right when the left had gone astray with its philanthropic mega projects. In all these polarization in which extreme positions are taken the only hope is to anchor ourselves to our nature.

The only extremism allowed then, and our really true savior is the cultivation of our nature especially as a way to maintain a clear wisdom over the unavoidable escalations characterizing humans when they have lost their anchor and are just let floating over turbulent waters.

There is absolutely no doubt that any form of extremism will have an equal counter extremism in a short matter of time and space. Ideologies and political agendas are therefore a true calamity in a way that humans can embrace them fanatically without, leaving their nature behind.

Within each of us is the framework of understating we seek in these mainstream networks only leading to war and destruction. We only need to get humble and start from us and slowly expand outward. Everything then will not only become comprehensible but also and in particular meaningful.

All these ready made frameworks, whether religious or philosophical or political will therefore appear to us for the lazy ones or even worst for the dogmatic ones willing to build an army under their flag. When the armies will clash our wisdom will keep us repaired up on a safe cliff under its tent.
