

The Duty of Natural Communicators

What makes us worthy? Is it the social value we may gain? But isn't it a form of greediness to gain value in the social context? In the slow pace of the everyday our spirit ought to perform in accordance to a certain directive. I think the adherence to a directive is, more over than the key to an ephemeral social gain, the key to a radiance of the soul which is able to perpetrate beyond the single individual and enrich others.

Why all these philanthropic ideologies and this political fuss when our spiritual radiance alone can heal the surrounding? All the capital minded crowd is sooner or later going to consume nature from its outskirts to the very epicenter, our soul. The process is irreversible unless we, single beings are able to reverse the process with much radiance coming from within and out onto the dark blindness coming against us.

We ought to peacefully accept the isolation and self-confinement. It is not a selfish act but it is the precondition to create a natural radiance working against the blinding chaos amplified by humans who lost any connection with their nature. In the electric age we are doomed to think with our nerves. Yet it is nature to chill the nerves and give access to the supernatural.

As we all transform into superartificial beings, alteration and distortion cannot but cause a global cancer. We ought to stay the sane cells anchored and rooted to the self in constant relation with whatever natural entity we can find even in the most artificial of places. All that we are assisting is yet another escalation of irreversible destruction.

The potential for the a new life is us and whatever we can stow through our open communication with the various natural manifestations. Our duty s that of bringing forward a possible tank of refreshing meanings. The time to release them will be also a natural occurrence as it is natural our constant flow of communication until our death.