

The Neo-Christian Conformists of the New Empire

Is there a way to define the set of values that one is forced to take in consideration in order to be included in the contemporary culture and intellectual industry? Ironically this is the very industry that so much promotes values such as inclusiveness and yet if one is not to fully comply to these set of values he or she can very well consider him or herself excluded. One ought to fully comply to the new regime of values without any slight shadow of doubt.

Now I have already discussed the emergence of a new set of values in my previous essays but here an idea is emerging more and more consolidated. This idea is that this new set of values is but a reformation of the former Christian religion. It is but Christianity kept in disguise by the official intellectuals, the official artists, the official film-makers and producers of our time so much believing without a doubt about such values and so much hating anyone who does not adhere to them, so much labeling he or she a devil.

Awaiting for the future inquisitions to come, inquisitions that will wipe out any intellect deviating even slightly from this regimental track, I believe that these values or rather these principles and pillars of this new religion in disguise are purposely kept untouched. By so doing they are strongly reshaping the way society think, the way social members are extruded through them and cannot or dare not to think otherwise. By so doing humans are left debilitated of any thinking beyond the arithmetics they can make summing up and multiplying these new old integers.

I suppose that beyond debating each and every of these integers per se, to me these perfectly functioning societies perfectly squeezing out highly predictable intellects it is what scares me the most. Yes of course the sharing of common values is in the very interest of society and a society can only well function if there is a common faith but gosh, the human brain can go so much and so far beyond these mental set-ups.

I shall say humans must go beyond these set-ups as their very boundaries are soon to produce a redundancy that will make the social members within two or three generations completely dull. What I suppose can bring any individual to go beyond a disguised state religion is the ability to, in turn disguise him or herself in several of them while keeping somewhat his check on the very realities he or she is experiencing.

One ought to keep in disguise never getting tempted to consolidate his or her social position, the position of nothing but a priest. In this tight religious set-ups I believe this is the only way to device a new philosophy a philosophy of, first of all awareness of the numbed human condition, an awareness for the sake of awakening the spirit and opening it up to a far larger multitude of thoughts and for the blossoming of rare flowers bringing not only a newer and fresher scent in the rot social scene but especially new nourishment a nourishment that in turn will alter the chain of causes and effects set out by the neo Christian mechanics.

Now of course the type of awakening I am referring to is something societies themselves cannot even slightly dare to conceive as the actual uncontrolled blossoming of social members cannot but result in the total social collapse, a permanent eclipse of a radioactive system that it is only but draining natural resources, both from the environment and, as technology keeps refining itself, more and more from the very nature of actual people.

A practice of awareness in this respect I believe to be but the only practical way to set up a fortress from within our on individual nature and to discipline it as soldiers getting ready if not for war getting ready to defend the republic within, as much as Cato Uticensis attempted to fight the uprising of the Roman empire.

Now this empire is just but extending its tentacles far deep within us via all its social media interfaces and the wearable technologies we will soon all have to adopt to for the sake of social security, a social security which will but get far and far more suffocating and oppressing. Ironically under such oppression we will have to keep on smiling on the very innocent and philanthropic values that were sold to us especially from the very new aristocracy the one making such profit from our own data, our very selves.

There is no other solution but to be stoic and determined to keep as long as possible in disguise and to conceive Troy horses for the wide spread imperialistic conformism and the religion that is emerging arm in arm with it. This is the tactic I propose in the imminent emergence of a new dogmatic governmental morality which we will all have to accept and which we have all partially accepted given its merciful spirit of not the single humans but a society acting more and more as a holly human.

In this impersonation of the social body as a whole there is not only the danger of reestablishing a strong monotheistic truth; the danger is that more and more thoroughly governance will be able to tune our morality and our ethical upbringing. Confessions won't be needed, sins will to some degree be allowed yet a different kind of morality will not be tolerated. We will all have to comply and even if a young soul might sense that things are not going the way they should, that somehow the neo Christian society is going (contrary to the commodified teachings of Jesus) against its human nature, he or she will be eventually silenced, labeled as a solitary wolf, a dangerous individual.

I suppose that we could all leave with these new Christian values happily ever after. I suppose we could all agree to a global set of values yet I believe that the world as well as the universe is regulated by compensating forces and if part of the world opt for a set of values the other part will adhere to a set completely opposing to it. In this respect I see in such a governmental adherence a first danger. Secondly, as I already hinted, I believe that such monoethical approaches bears the greater danger of to some extent making individuals going against their own nature or at least hindering them to fully live in accordance to it.

I believe that any ready-made set of values whether it comes from a religion or whatever ideology to some degree has an effect on individuals that can go from numbing to complete alteration. So not only religion then is an opium but also ideologies are some sort of anti-depressing pills giving humans a sense of content for otherwise meaningless lives spent in compliance with social structures. As much as we can then, I think we ought to abstain from taking these sort of drugs and in the mist of passive smoking, when literally the environment is filled of moral narcotics a practice of awareness is our check with reality, is our check that we can keep some common sense especially as humans will need stronger and stronger drugs to feel enfolded with the decaying power of monoethical set-up such as the Confucian like conformism I am describing.

We are but entering a new and permanent paradigm forever entrenching us in our meaningless tasks of clerks draining ourselves only for the sake of sustaining a common enforced framework. There is no way of breaking this trajectory but by attempting in all our human individual effort to devise our own set of meanings and values, not ought of a mere global convention but ought of our merging back into nature, becoming one with it and flowing in a nymph now totally dried up in the desert dust circulating within the the social circuit boards.